

POP

8. [A word of slight contempt.] Wretched.
The poor monk never saw many of the decrees and councils he had occasion to use. Baker's Reflect. on Learning.
9. Not good; not fit for any purpose.
I have very poor and unhappy brains for drinking: I could with courtesy invent some other entertainment. Shakep.
10. The Poor. [collectively.] Those who are in the lowest rank of the community; those who cannot subsist but by the charity of others; but it is sometimes used with laxity for any not rich.
From a confin'd well manag'd store,
You both employ and feed the poor. Waller.
Never any time since the reformation can shew so many poor amongst the widows and orphans of churchmen, as this particular time. Spratt's Sermons.
Has God cast thy lot amongst the poor of this world, by denying thee the plenty of this life, or by taking them away?
this may be preventing mercy; for much mischief riches do to the sons of men. South's Sermons.
The poor dare nothing tell but flatt'ring news. Dryden.
11. Barren; dry: as, a poor soil.
12. Lean; starved; emaciated: as, a poor horse.
Where juice wanteth, the language is thin, flagging, poor, starved and scarce covering the bone. Benj. Johnson.
13. Without spirit; flaccid.
POORLY. adv. [from poor.]
1. Without wealth.
Those thieves spared his life, letting him go to learn to live poorly. Sidney, b. ii.
2. Not prosperously; with little success.
If you sow one ground with the same kind of grain, it will prosper but poorly. Bacon.
3. Meanly; without spirit.
Your constancy
Hath left you unattended: be not lost
So poorly in your thoughts. Shakep. Macbeth.
Nor is their courage or their wealth so low,
That from his wars they poorly would retire. Dryden.
4. Without dignity.
You meaner beauties of the night,
That poorly satisfy our eyes,
More by your number than your light,
You common people of the skies;
What are you when the sun shall rise. Wotton.
- POORJOHN. n. f. A sort of fish. Ainsworth.
- POORNKS. n. f. [from poor.]
1. Poverty; indigence; want.
If a prince should complain of the poorness of his exchequer, would he be angry with his merchants, if they brought him a cargo of good bullion. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. Meanness; lowliness; want of dignity.
The Italian opera seldom sinks into a poorness of language, but, amidst all the meanness of the thoughts, has something beautiful and sonorous in the expression. Addison.
There is a kind of sluggish resignation, as well as poorness and degeneracy of spirit, in a state of slavery. Addison.
3. Sterility; barrenness.
The poorness of the herbs shews the poorness of the earth, especially if in colour more dark. Bacon.
Enquire the differences of metals which contain other metals, and how that agrees with the poorness or riches of the metals in themselves. Bacon.
- POORSPIRITED. adj. [poor and spirit.] Mean; cowardly.
Mirvan! poorspirited wretch! thou hast deceiv'd me. Den.
- POORSPIRITEDNESS. n. f. Meanness; cowardice.
A cause of men's taking pleasure in the sins of others, is,
from that meanness and poorspiritedness that accompanies guilt. South's Sermons.
- P. P. n. f. [populifinus, Lat.] A small smart quick found. It is formed from the found.
I have several ladies, who could not give a pop loud enough to be heard at the farther end of the room, who can now discharge a fan, that it shall make a report like a pocket-pistol. Addison's Spectator, N° 102.
- To POP. v. n. [from the noun.] To move or enter with a quick, sudden and unexpected motion.
He that kill'd my king,
Pept in between th' election and my hopes. Shakep.
A boat was sunk and all the folk drowned, saving one only woman, that in her first popping up again, which most living things accustom, espied the boat risen likewise, and floating by her, got hold of the boat, and sat astride upon one of its sides. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
I startled at his popping upon me unexpectedly. Addison.
As he scratched to fetch up thought,
Forth popp'd the sprite to thine. Swift's Miscellanies.
Others have a trick of popping up and down every moment, from their paper to the audience, like an idle school-boy. Swift.
- To POP. v. a.
1. To put out or in suddenly, flily or unexpectedly.
That is my brother's plea,
The which if he can prove, he pops me out
At least from fair five hundred pound a year. Shakep.

POP

- He popped a paper into his hand.
A fellow, finding somewhat prick him, pop'd his finger upon the place. Milton.
The commonwealth popped up its head for the third time under Brutus and Cassius, and then sunk for ever. Dryden.
Didst thou never pop
Thy head into a tinman's shop? Prior.
2. To shift.
If their curiosity leads them to ask what they should not know, it is better to tell them plainly, that it is a thing that belongs not to them to know, than to pop them off with a fallhood. Locke on Education.
- POPE. n. f. [papa, Lat. ππάς.]
1. The bishop of Rome.
I refuse you for my judge; and Appeal unto the pope to be judg'd by him. Shakep.
He was organist in the pope's chapel at Rome. Peacocks.
Christianity has been more oppressed by those that thus sought for it, than those that were in arms against it; upon this score, the pope has done her more harm than the Turk. Deacy of Piety.
2. A small fish.
A pope, by some called a ruffe, is much like a perch for shape, but will not grow bigger than a gudgeon: he is an excellent fish, of a pleasant taste, and pawns in April.
Walton's Angler.
- POPEDOM. [pope and dom.] Papacy; papal dignity.
That world of wealth I've drawn together
For mine own ends; indeed, to gain the popeedom. Shakep.
- POPERY. n. f. [from pope.] The religion of the church of Rome.
Popery for corruptions in doctrine and discipline, I look upon to be the most absurd system of christianity. Swift.
- POPESEYE. n. f. [pope and eye.] The gland surrounded with fat in the middle of the thigh: why so called I know not.
- POPEGUN. n. f. [pop and gun.] A gun with which children play, that only makes a noise.
Life is not weak enough to be destroyed by this popgun artillery of tea and coffee. Cibyne.
- POPINJAY. [papagey, Dutch; papagayo, Spanish.]
1. A parrot.
Young popinjays learn quickly to speak. Ascham.
The great red and blue parrot; there are of these greater,
the middlemost called popinjays, and the lesser called paroquets. Grew's Museum.
2. A woodpecker. So it seems to be used here.
Terpsichore would be expell'd, upon her head a coronet of those green feathers of the popinjay, in token of that victory which the mules got of the daughters of Pictus, who were turned into popinjays or woodpeckers. Peacocks.
3. A trifling top.
I, all smarting with my wounds, being gall'd
To be so petter'd by a popinjay, Answer'd neglectingly, I know not what. Shakep.
- POPISH. adj. [from pope.] Taught by the pope; relating to popery; peculiar to popery.
In this sense as they affirm, so we deny, that whatsoever is popish we ought to abrogate. Hooker.
I know thou art religious,
With twenty popish tricks and ceremonies. Shakep.
- POPISHLY. adv. [from popish.] With tendency to popery; in a popish manner.
She baffled the many attempts of her enemies, and entirely broke the whole force of that party among her subjects, which was popishly affected. Addison's Freeholder.
A friend in Ireland, popishly speaking, I believe constantly well disposed towards me. Pope to Swift.
- POPULAR. n. f. [populifer, Fr. populus, Lat.] A tree.
The leaves of the poplar are broad, and for the most part angular: the male trees produce amentaceous flowers, which have many little leaves and apices, but are barren: the female trees produce membranaceous pods, which open into two parts, containing many seeds, which have a large quantity of down adhering to them, and are collected into spikes. Miller.
Po is drawn with the face of an ox, with a garland of poplar upon his head. Peacocks on Drawing.
All he describ'd was present to their eyes,
And as he rais'd his voice, the poplars seem'd to rise. Ross.
So falls a poplar, that in wat'ry ground Rais'd high the head. Pope's Iliad.
- POPPY. n. f. [popiz, Sax. papaver, Lat.] A plant.
The flower of the poppy, for the most part, consists of four leaves, placed orbicularly, and expanded in form of a rose, out of whose flower cup, consisting of two leaves, rises the poin-tal, which afterwards becomes a fruit or pod that is oval or oblong, and adorned with a little head, under which, in some species, is opened a series of holes quite round into the cavity of the fruit, which is defended lengthwise with various leaves or plates, to which a great number of very small seeds adhere: of these are eighteen species: some sort is cultivated for medicinal use; and some suppose it to be the plant whence opium is produced. Miller.

POP

- His temples last with poppies were o'erspread,
That nodding seem'd to consecrate his head. Dryden.
Dr. Lifter has been guilty of mistake, in the reflections he makes on what he calls the sleeping Cupid with poppy in his hands. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
- POPULACE. n. f. [populace, Fr. from populus, Lat.] The vulgar; the multitude.
Now swarms the populace, a countless throng,
Youth and hoar age tumultuous pour along. Pope.
The tribunes and people having subdued all competitors, began the last game of a prevalent populace, to chuse themselves a master. Swift.
- POPULACY. n. f. [populace, Fr.] The common people; the multitude.
Under colours of pious ambitious policies march, not only with security, but applause as to the populace. King Charles.
When he thinks one monarch's lust too mild a regiment, he can let in the whole populace of sin upon the soul. D. of Piety.
- POPULAR. adj. [populaire, Fr. popularis, Lat.]
1. Vulgar; plebeian.
I was sorry to hear with what partiality and popular heat elections were carried in many places. King Charles.
The emmet join'd in her popular tribes
Of commonality. Milton.
So the popular vote inclines. Milton.
2. Suitable to the common people.
Homilies are plain and popular instructions. Hooker.
3. Beloved by the people; pleasing to the people.
It might have been more popular and plausible to vulgar ears, if this first discourse had been spent in extolling the force of laws. Hooker, b. i.
Such as were popular,
And well-deserving, were advanc'd by grace. Daniel.
The old general was set aside, and prince Rupert put into the command, which was no popular change. Clarendon.
4. Studious of the favour of the people.
A popular man is, in truth, no better than a prostitute to common fame and to the people. Dryden.
His virtues have undone his country;
Such popular humanity is treason. Addison's Cato.
5. Prevailing or raging among the populace: as, a popular distemper.
POPULARITY. n. f. [popularitas, Lat. popularité, Fr. from popular.]
1. Graciousness among the people; state of being favoured by the people.
The best temper of minds desireth good name and true honour; the lighter, popularity and applause; the more depraved, subjection and tyranny. Bacon.
Your mind has been above the wretched affectation of popularity. Dryden.
Admire we then,
Or popularity, or flattery, or flattery,
The mob's applauses, or the gifts of kings. Pope.
He could be at the head of no factions and cabals, nor attended by a hired rabble, which his flatterers might represent as popularity. Swift.
2. Representation suited to vulgar conception; what affects the vulgar.
The persuader's labour is to make things appear good or evil, which as it may be performed by solid reasons, so it may be represented also by colours, popularities and circumstances, which sway the ordinary judgment. Eaton.
- POPULARLY. adv. [from popular.]
1. In a popular manner; so as to please the crowd.
The victor knight
Bareheaded, popularly low had bow'd,
And paid the salutations of the crowd. Dryden.
Influenc'd by the rabble's bloody will,
With thumbs bent back, they popularly kill. Dryden.
2. According to vulgar conception.
Nor can we excuse the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow those commendatory conceits, which popularity let forth the eminency thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- To POPULATE. v. n. [from populus, people.] To breed people.
When there are great shoals of people, which go on to populate, without foreseeing means of life and sustentation, it is of necessity, that once in an age they discharge a portion of their people upon other nations. Bacon's Essays.
- POPULATION. n. f. [from populate.] The state of a country with respect to numbers of people.
The population of a kingdom, especially if it be not mown down by wars, does not exceed the stock of the kingdom, which should maintain them; neither is the population to be reckoned, only by number; for a smaller number, that spend more and earn less, do wear out an estate sooner than a greater number, that live lower, and gather more. Bacon.
- POPULOSITY. n. f. [from populus.] Populousness; multitude of people.
How it conducteth unto populosity, we shall make but little doubt; there are two main causes of numerosity in any species;
a frequent and multiparous way of breeding. Brown.

POR

- POPULOUS. adj. [populosus, Lat.] Full of people; numerously inhabited.
A wilderness is populosus enough.
So Suffolk had thy heav'nly company. Shakep.
Far the greater part have kept Their station; heav'n yet populous, retains Number sufficient to possess her realms. Milton.
- POPULOUSLY. adv. [from populosus.] With much people.
- POPULOUSNESS. n. f. [from populosus.] The state of abounding with people.
This will be allowed by any that considers the vastness, the opulence, the populousness of this region, with the ease and facility wherewith 'tis governed. Temple's Miscellanies.
- PORCELAIN. n. f. [porcelaine, Fr. said to be derived from four cent anneé; because it was believed by Europeans, that the materials of porcelain was matured under ground one hundred years.]
1. China; china ware; fine dishes, of a middle nature between earth and glass, and therefore semi-pellucid.
We have burials in several earthen, where we put divers cements, as the Chinese do their porcelain. Bacon.
We are not thoroughly resolved concerning porcelain or china dishes; that according to common belief, they are made of earth, which lieth in preparation about a hundred years under ground. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The fine materials made it weak;
Porcelain, by being pure, is apt to break. Dryden.
These look like the workmanship of heav'n:
This is the porcelain clay of human kind,
And therefore cast into these noble molds. Dryden.
2. [Portulaca, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.
- PORCH. n. f. [porche, Fr. porticus, Lat.]
1. A roof supported by pillars before a door; an entrance.
Ehud went forth through the porch, and shut the doors of the parlour. Judges iii. 23.
Not infants in the porch of life were free,
The sick, the old, that could but hope a day Longer by nature's bounty, not let stay. Benj. Johnson.
2. A portico; a covered walk.
All this done,
Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find us. Shakep.
- PORCUPINE. n. f. [porc epi or epic, Fr. porcupine, Italian.]
The porcupine, when full grown, is as large as a moderate pig: the quills, with which its whole body is covered, are black on the shoulders, thighs, sides and belly; on the back, hips and loins they are variegated with white and pale brown;
the neck is short and thick, the nose blunt, the nostrils very large in form of slits; the upper lip is slit or cleft as in the hare, and it has whiskers like a cat: the eyes are small, and the ears very like those of the human species: the legs are short, and on the hinder feet are five toes, but only four upon the fore-feet, and its tail is four or five inches long, beset with spines in an annular series round it: there is no other difference between the porcupine of Malacca and that of Europe, but that the former grows to a larger size. Hill.
- This stubborn Cade
Fought so long, till that his thighs with darts
Were almost like a sharp-quill'd porcupine. Shakespeare.
Long bearded comets tick
Like flaming porcupines to their left sides,
As they would shoot their quills into their hearts. Dryden.
By the black prince of Monomotapa's side were the glaring cat-a-mountain and the quill-darting porcupine. Ar. and Po.
- PORE. n. f. [pore, Fr. πύρε.]
1. Sprinkle of the skin; passage of perspiration.
Witches, carrying in the air, and transforming themselves into other bodies, by ointments and anointing themselves all over, may justly move a man to think, that these fables are the effects of imagination; for it is certain, that ointments do all, if laid on any thing thick, by stopping of the pores, shut in the vapours, and send them to the head extremely. Bac.
Why was the fight
To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd?
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,
And not, as feeling through all parts diffus'd,
That the might look at will through every pore. Milton.
2. Any narrow spiracle or passage.
Pores are small interstices between the particles of matter which constitute every body, or between certain aggregates or combinations of them. Quincy.
From veins of vallies milk and nectar broke,
And honey sweating through the pores of oak. Dryden.
- To PORE. v. n. [pore] is the optic nerve; but I imagine pore to come by corruption from some English word.] To look with great intenceness and care; to examine with great attention.
All delights are vain; but that most vain,
Which with pain purchas'd, doth inherit pain;
As painfully to pore upon a book,
To seek the light of truth, while truth the while Doth falsely blind the eyesight. Shakespeare.
